Leading during Covid has asked a great deal of us all – including the need to work with a range of emotions – both our own and from others. Additionally, many professionals are finding that working virtually has blurred the boundaries between work and home, bringing emotion into our personal sanctuaries.

Within a system under pressure, it is vital that people have a safe space to talk about how they feel – without judgement. This workshop explores how to create safe boundaries, the complexity of managing emotions – and we can just talk. This is two hours just for you, whilst talking about the messy but very human part of life – how people feel. We would love for you to join us.
