

Finance Skills Development

Top tips for Teams

Building a New Team

Top tips for Teams: Motivating a Team

Top tips for Teams: Relationships and Roles

What is a Team?

Coming together is a beginning. Keeping together is progress. Working together is success.

Henry Ford

Teamwork

You often hear the word 'teamwork' used in relation to increased efficiency, output and motivation. It sounds so simple to achieve, and yet the reality is sometimes much harder.

In the NHS, never has it been more important to work together as a team. Teams are pressed to deliver more with less, more demands are made on time and resources, meaning that teams have to prioritise like never before.

So what is a team? As defined by Katzenbach and Smith in 1993

A team is "A small number of people with complementary skills who are committed to a common purpose, performance goals and an approach for which they hold themselves mutually accountable"

Building a New Team

Managing a new team can be a daunting prospect, and when it's done well, new teams can quickly contribute to improved organisational performance whilst feeling empowered and engaged. Bruce Tuckman analysed the stages teams go through from inception to the point that they are fully contributing and performing. The table below shows those stages, and some of the challenges you may face at each stage. Use the table to consider where your team are.

	What you might notice generally.	What you might notice about the work itself.	What you might notice about how the staff go about doing the work.	How staff may be feeling.
FORMING	Uncertainty about roles, looking outside for guidance.	Some attempt to define the job to be done. Each person has his or her own job and works under close supervision.	Team members look outside for guidance and direction. The supervisor plays a strong role as the boss and tells the staff what to do.	People feel anxious and are unsure of their roles. Most look to a leader or coordinator for guidance At this dependent level, because each person operates separately and most in the direction of the supervisor, the group does not seem to go anywhere.
STORMING	Growing confidence in team, rejecting outside authority. Jockeying for position within the team. "look/listen to me as I am an authority on this"	Team members resist the task demands. Each person continues to be responsible for his or her own main area and works independently.	Team members deny the task and look for the reasons not to do it. (looking for the 'cream' jobs to do rather than menial ones). Staff continue to work independently in order to gain possible favour with the supervisor.	People still feel uncertain and try to express their individuality. Concerns arise about the team hierarchy. Helping each other and covering for each other does not occur often.
NORMING	Concern about being different, wanting to be part of team.	There is an open exchange of views about the team's problems. Staff work with minimal direction from the supervisor. Still an element of working independently.	The team starts to set up the procedures to deal with the task. Staff come together in one department because they serve a common overall function.	People ignore individual differences.  Team members are more accepting of one another.
PERFORMIN	Concern with getting the job done. Staff rely on each other to get the work done. "the whole is greater than the sum of it's parts"	Resources are allocated efficiently and processes are in place to ensure that the final objective is achieved. There will be more shared responsibilities.	The team is able to solve problems. They coordinate with each other to produce a set of outcomes. This is interdependence.	People share a common focus, communicate effectively and become more efficient and flexible as a result.

Moving the Team Forward

You will notice from the table that the different stages of team development affect performance levels of the team. As a manager you will want to move your team towards a high level of performance quickly. The diagram below shares some actions you can take to do this:

From forming to storming From storming to norming From norming to performing Clarify roles within the team so that Strong leadership and direction is Encourage team members to recognise you can allocate tasks appropriately. needed to keep the team unified and and make the most of each other's ensure cooperation. strengths. Make team goals explicit and ensure they are understood by everyone. Discuss team values and agree on how Foster an atmosphere of open you will work together as a team. You communication. A high level of support will be needed might want to agree on ground rules here as the team get to know each You can now start to take less of a or a 'team contract' for how you will other and their tasks. Be available to directing role. Give team members work together. provide support whenever necessary. more autonomy where appropriate Take on a motivational role, pointing and empower them by delegating out the positive aspects of what the tasks based on their skills and team can achieve together and instilling expertise. This will boost confidence a sense of team spirit. and motivation. Passionately articulate the team's vision to inspire others and gain commitment. Self Reliance Time

As the team matures, so does the way in which team members work together and interact. Initially, there will be lots of politeness among the team and a high level of dependence on you as the manager. Your aim is to get the team to a point where they are inter-dependent, i.e. they each play an important part in delivering what is expected of the team. As a manager of a new team, a key part of this is about setting out a vision of where you want the team to go, developing a team culture (e.g. reputation for quality, for service...) and ensuring everyone in the team knows what their part of the team is.

Motivating a Team

Wearing the same shirts doesn't make you a team

Buchholz and Roth

In the NHS at the moment, the make up of teams is changing, priorities seem to be continually shifting and fluctuating workloads are putting untold pressures onto teams. All this can leave team members feeling bewildered and distracted. As a manager it's your job to maintain focus and keep the spirits of your team high so that you can continue to deliver.

Creating the right environment

Think about your experiences as a customer in a shop or a restaurant. It's almost impossible to get good service from a staff member who isn't motivated. We spend a lot of our time at work so it's critical that you can create a culture in your team where people are engaged in what they do and want to do a good job.

Imagine working at a fish mongers stall. It's cold, it's wet, it smells fishy, it involves early starts. You could be excused for thinking it's not the most motivating work environment.

Yet research done on motivation found the Pike Place Fishmongers Stall in Seattle, USA, to be the most motivating work environment in the world (as referenced in FISH, by Stephen C Lundin PhD, Harry Paul and John Christensen)! They were able to energise creativity and problem solving abilities among the staff, and motivate them to go the extra mile, happily!

So what are their secrets? Pike Place put their motivating environment down to four simple principles:

Motivational Principles	Action
Choose Your Attitude  People often allow their circumstances and external events to affect their attitude, yet in reality, only 'YOU' are able to choose your attitude, and how you're going to respond to an event. There is always a choice about the way you do your work, even if there's no choice about the work that you're doing!	Develop a Team Charter or Team Values that articulate how the team will behave towards each other.  Be sure to talk about the positives, e.g. progress made, what's good about the team, what's gone well.  Challenge those who have a negative attitude, pointing out their impact on others.
Be there for Your Team  'Being there' is about being present for your team. If someone is talking to us on the phone, how many of us continue to tap into our pc? Sometimes it can be heard! Being there is about being present! It makes a difference!  Being present will help you:-  Listen  Create rapport with your team  Get a reputation of being a people person	Have regular one-to-ones with everyone in your team – away from the desk. Physically move away from your PC if someone in your team starts a conversation with you.  If you don't have time to deal with a team issue there and then, explain this to the team member and create a time when you can talk.  If you have been in meetings or away from the team for the day, aim to check in with the team at the end of the day.
Value and Appreciate Others  Working in a team is an emotional experience. We all spend a lot of time in the workplace and it's nice to know we are valued and appreciated for the part we play in a team.	Make an effort to remember your team member birthdays and/or special anniversaries. Making a diary note can help.  Say "thank you" for the effort people put into a task as well as the output they produce for you.  Creatively reward your team and individuals within it for excellent work. For example ice creams on a hot day or bringing in a packet of biscuits for the team meeting can go down well.
Create a Workplace Buzz Research shows that play and having fun at work will:  Energise the creativity and problem solving abilities in you and others!  Motivate people to go the extra mile, happily!  Makes time pass more quickly when involved in routine work.	Start team meetings with a quiz or a puzzle.  Introduce friendly competitions.  Link team activities to national events (e.g. Grand National Sweepstake).  If your work environment allows this, choose a day of the week or month to dress in casual clothes.  Select a local charity and share ideas for fundraising or volunteering time to support it.

You and your team may not have choice in the work that you do, but you do have choice in the way that you do it!

Motivating Team Members

As a manager in a changing NHS, your team will look to you to provide them with motivation, and help them to make sense of what's going on around them.

Here's a question for you: What does your boss do that helps to motivate you? Think about it for a moment and maybe note down those things.

Whilst motivation is personal, there are common things that help to motivate all of us:

- Appreciation Feeling appreciated for what I do and that my contribution to the team is valued.
- Involvement Feeling that I'm involved in decisions and able to contribute ideas to the team.
- Treated Like an Individual Knowing that my manager understands me, respects me and challenges me to perform well.

Here are some practical hints and tips that you can use to bring these motivators to life:

Motivator	Why it is Important	Action You Can Take
Appreciation	Expressing appreciation is the first step in creating an atmosphere that will motivate people.	<ul> <li>Give a team member verbal praise on immediate completion of a successful project and share this achievement with the team.</li> <li>Meet regularly with individuals to review what they've achieved.</li> <li>Meet regularly as a team to discuss what has been achieved.</li> <li>Celebrate team or organisational success: when a project is completed don't rush on to the next one without first stopping to acknowledge both individual and team accomplishments.</li> </ul>
Involvement	People want to feel involved in their work. It would be completely impractical to involve everyone in every decision, discussion or project that ever takes place, but allowing for greater team member contribution, especially around initiatives that will directly affect them, gives people a sense of inclusion and importance.	<ul> <li>Involve team members in the decision-making process as much as is practical. This could be as simple as asking people to email you their thoughts and ideas on the topic up for discussion, or having an ideas sheet on the departmental notice-boards.</li> <li>Encourage team members to work on projects together.</li> <li>Have an occasional work night out or an office get-together to allow people to meet in a social context.</li> </ul>
Treated Like an Individual	Another important factor that can boost morale when people feel that management is genuinely concerned about them as an individual.	<ul> <li>Always consider and treat team members as individuals. Find out what interests them, both at work and in their personal lives, what their expectations are for the job and how they gain satisfaction from the work they do.</li> <li>Ensure each individual is stretched and challenged in a way that promotes their growth and development. Set targets for your team members.</li> <li>Offer on-the-job coaching and training whenever possible.</li> <li>Actively demonstrate concern for health and safety.</li> </ul>

Interestingly, the above motivators don't cost the NHS a penny, other than investing a few minutes a day of your time. We all know that a motivated team performs well, and the benefits you will gain will far outweigh that investment.

Relationships and Roles

Do you want a collection of brilliant minds or a brilliant collection of minds?

R. Meredith Belbin

Teams are made up of people and are therefore by their very nature complex. Relationships are capable of changing even when there is no change in the people within the team. As people change and evolve, so will the team and its performance, so it's important to keep a close eye on team relationships to ensure a positive and productive working atmosphere.

Teamwork Relationships

By personality we are different, and as such we will have things in common with some members of the team and also some differences in the way we do things and the way we think. With so much structural change in the NHS, we find ourselves in teams where people's preferences and styles are different to what we have been used to. It is important to recognise that people aren't being difficult, they are simply being themselves.

Trying to manage such differences in personality within a team can be a challenge, and a good starting point is to understand some of the differences, recognise them and appreciate how they can add value to the team. For example, an outspoken member of the team may distract or annoy quieter members of the team, but they would deal confidently with a demanding stakeholder or customer!

The table below shows some typical personality traits, along with the strengths they bring to the team, and the impact of overplaying these strengths.

Someone who focuses on:	Their Strengths	Action Used Inappropriately	Solutions
People and relationships	<ul> <li>Care about the way people in the team feel.</li> <li>Look for ways to help the team.</li> <li>Trying to avoid being a burden to the team.</li> <li>Stick up for the team members.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Can be seen as smothering by other team members.</li> <li>Can take on too much.</li> <li>Fight other people's battles unnecessarily.</li> <li>At the extreme can show emotions inappropriately.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Show appreciation for what they do well.</li> <li>Ensure 1-1 discussions focus on task as well as relationships.</li> <li>Provide feedback on the impact of their behavior on others (both positive and negative)</li> </ul>
Task and output	<ul> <li>Competitive on behalf of the team.</li> <li>Persuasive.</li> <li>Alert to opportunities for the team.</li> <li>See the need to take risks.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Can be competitive within the team.</li> <li>May want to be in the limelight all the time.</li> <li>May not appreciate other's contributions.</li> <li>At the extreme can become aggressive when outputs aren't achieved.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Encourage them to share their direction with others.</li> <li>Ensure they listen to others ideas and approaches.</li> <li>Set clear parameters of responsibility and tangible outputs.</li> <li>Provide situations for partnership working.</li> </ul>
Data and Information	<ul> <li>Objective and logical in their approach.</li> <li>In control of emotions.</li> <li>Think things through before acting.</li> <li>Take a cautious and thorough approach.</li> <li>Organised and concerned with procedure.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Can be slow in their decision-making and in completing tasks.</li> <li>Can be seen as nit-picking or rule-bound.</li> <li>Tend to look in the past rather than the future.</li> <li>Good ideas can remain inside their heads.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Set clear timescales and expectations of outputs.</li> <li>Paint a picture of the future to help them to understand it.</li> <li>Encourage them to share their ideas.</li> <li>Provide feedback on the quality of their work.</li> </ul>

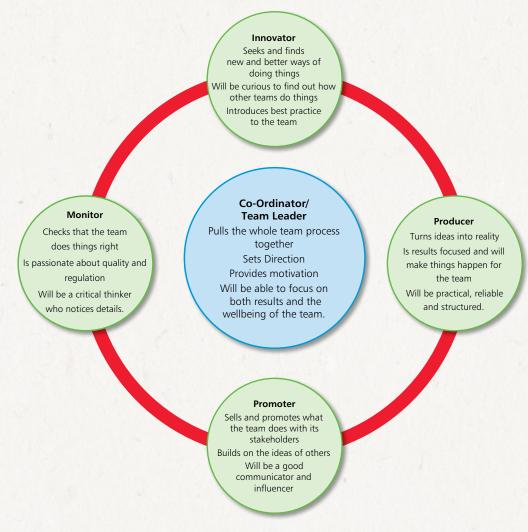

Use the table to reflect on your team members – where are their characteristics adding value to the team and where are they creating barriers to team performance? Try out some of the solutions to ensure you get the best out of each team member and develop harmonious relationships within the team.

Team Roles

Within a team, there are different types of work that need to be done if the team is to perform and deliver in an "all round", successful way. Dependent on our personalities, there are different elements of this work that we will enjoy doing more than others. For example, some people love spending their time going from meeting to meeting with different stakeholders, whilst others couldn't think of a worse way of spending their day! These types of work shape the roles that need to be played within a successful team.

The different roles are summarised below.

Thinking about the roles above, consider your team:

- In which roles does your team spend most of its time? For the work you do, how appropriate is this?
- How balanced is your team's focus across these roles? What can you do to increase the balance?
- Which team member's skills and strengths lend themselves to each of the different roles? How much of their time are they spending in these roles?
- Where do you have gaps, i.e. where nobody plays a role naturally, how could team members share their expertise to ensure all roles are covered?

Doctor Meredith Belbin, Charles Margerison and Dick McCann have done a lot of work in this area. See the FSD website for more detailed information.

Developing your Team Further

The Team Intervention Model below looks at a team's needs across two factors; considering how much the team needs to focus on developing the skills, behaviours or relationships of the team, and how much it needs to focus on dealing with the business issues facing the team.

The model then summarises the different types of team intervention that would be appropriate for the team depending upon its needs.

→ High

2. Team Building

Involves team members learning about themselves and each other to work together better.

- Team health check
- Team/individual profiling
- Simulation exercise to boost skills e.g. Communication

3. Team Development

Involves learning more about what the team can do to improve results.

- Team profiling questionaries
- Business simulation exercise
- Performance planning

ocus on skills and behaviour

1. Team Bonding

Focus is on fun/personal activities to increase individual and team motivation and bonding.

- Outdoor activities and recreation
- Team games
- Creative activities

4. Team Pit-Stop

An analytical consideration of how to improve business performance

- Developing vision and strategy
- Continuous improvement plans
- Activities to improve team results
- Performance and effectiveness

Low

NO.

- Focus on business and task

High

The Team Intervention Model has been designed by Aspire Development UK Ltd. Aspire has significant experience of working with teams in the NHS to support their development and performance.

If you want to discuss a team event in more detail, or would like to receive more information about the type of team events available, please call Aspire Development UK Ltd on 01422 241964, or visit the Aspire website at:

www.aspiredevelopment.co.uk

Other factors that help motivation in a team are building up individual's resilience and dealing with change effectively. Effective delegation and coaching also contribute to increasing performance in teams.

For further information go to www.fsdnetwork.com to download:

- Top Tips Dealing with Change.
- Top Tips Increasing Productivity
- Guide to Coaching within NHS Finance.

www.fsdnetwork.com