Leading during Covid has asked a great deal of us all – including the need to work with a range of emotions. Primary Care including the rest of Health and Social care Leaders at all levels have risen to the challenge in what has been an unprecedented year for the NHS.

For this to be effective, individuals had to develop mentor-led interventions. developing their compassionate, inclusive and distributive leadership resources to deal with the situation at hand including aspects of population health management, equality, diversity and inclusion. It is against this background that fully funded webinars have been designed to provide a practical approach to Population Health Management and a unique insight into the behaviour science of leading and managing change to address inequalities.

This Programme is a collaborative work of East Of England & Midlands Leadership & Lifelong Learning Teams. Facilitated jointly by National Association of Primary Care and Carter & Corson
